a troubling study of the role that medical racism plays in the lives of black women who have given birth to premature and low birth weight infants black women have higher rates of premature birth than other women in america this cannot be simply explained by economic factors with poorer women lacking resources or access to care even professional middle class black women are at a much higher risk of premature birth than low income white women in the united states dána ain davis looks into this phenomenon placing racial differences in birth outcomes into a historical context revealing that ideas about reproduction and race today have been influenced by the legacy of ideas which developed during the era of slavery while poor and low income black women are often the mascots of premature birth outcomes this book focuses on professional black women who are just as likely to give birth prematurely drawing on an impressive array of interviews with nearly fifty mothers fathers neonatologists nurses midwives and reproductive justice advocates dána ain davis argues that events leading up to an infant's arrival in a neonatal intensive care unit nicu and the parents experiences while they are in the nicu reveal subtle but pernicious forms of racism that confound the perceived class dynamics that are frequently understood to be a central factor of premature birth the book argues not only that medical racism persists and must be considered when examining adverse outcomes as well as upsetting experiences for parents but also that nicus and life saving technologies should not be the only strategies for improving the outcomes for black pregnant women and their babies davis makes the case for other avenues such as community based birthing projects doulas and midwives that support women during pregnancy and labor are just as important and effective in avoiding premature births and mortality
