this paper provides empirical evidence on the effects of inflation on post war capital flight flows i test the hypothesis that inflation has a positive additional impact on capital flight flows after war i use a new panel dataset of 77 developing countries of which 35 experienced at least one episode of war between 1971 and 2000 i use a range of estimation methods and four capital flight measures cline world bank residual morgan guarantee and dooley the results consistently support the research hypothesis post war inflation increase annual capital flight flows by about 0 005 to 0 01 percentage points of gdp this effect is substantial in total at high inflation rates the implication is that low inflation helps to curb capital flight in post conflict economies this paper examines annual commodity price data from england and holland over a span of seven centuries our data set incorporates transaction prices on 8 commodities barley butter cheese eggs oats peas silver wheat as well as pound shilling nominal exchange rates going back in some cases to 1273 we find that the volatility and persistence of deviations from the law of one price have been remarkably stable over time lop deviations are highly correlated across commodities especially at annual horizons and for most pairwise comparisons in most centuries at least as volatile as relative prices across different goods within the same country our analysis challenges the conventional view that the modern floating exchange rate experience is exceptional in terms of the behavior of relative exchange related adjusted prices across countries page 1
